

This from the New York Times, yesterday, in a story about the problem of full landfills in Naples, Italy (emphasis mine):
As the piles rose and the stench spread, 100 or more refuse fires burned some nights — one of many trash related protests that included, inevitably, mothers clutching rosaries on railroad tracks.We like this ours of inevitability to mathematically and the start of the like this ours.

We like this aura of inevitability to mothers clutching rosaries on railroad tracks, but must admit to being somehwat baffled by it.