

She sung me Hungarian lullabies with such earnest determination that it almost startled me, but the low, soft murmur of her voice and the transcendent beauty of the music took their soporific toll and I was soon lost in a most rigid torpor.